The Beatitudes are about seeking constantly for truth, beauty, and goodness, in everything that we do, that we think, in the way we interact with one another. Our Lord gives us the strength necessary to do that...

From the homily at the funeral Mass

"The Beatitudes are about seeking constantly for truth, beauty, and goodness, in everything that we do, that we think, in the way we interact with one another. Our Lord gives us the strength necessary to do that...

Mother reflected [The Beatitudes]... As a dedicated person, she always said, "What is the most beautiful, the most truthful, what is the best thing to do for others?"...She lived a hidden life, and she wished it to be so, so that she never drew attention to herself but only to the Sacred Heart and the Immaculate Heart. Her dedication was always to others... She was about Christ in all things, about joy, and about love of the Church. When we think about Mother’s love, we think about how she noticed the smallest of things. She always thought of others, she always thought about, ‘What is the best? I see the potential in that individual. It may take a little while for me to coax it out of him, but I’m taking the opportunity and she set forth the conditions necessary to do so.”

In his homily, Father O’Flanagan explained the beginning of the community of the Sister Servants. “Through Mother Mary Gabriel’s discernment, she prayed and said, ‘There is a void here, and I believe that, with St. Dominic and St. Francis, we can have a contemplative/active community that will provide for retreats, provide for the education that we sorely need in this world for our beautiful Catholic Faith.’” To the right, Sister Mary Michael pronounces her first vows, pledging to live this life and charism.
